In recent years, the teaching of foreign languages has been developing rapidly in the field of education. Due to the modernization of technologies in the education system worldwide, the demand for language learning is increasing. It is precisely the need for fast and effective teaching of foreign languages at each stage of education that is the need of the hour. Currently, teaching English (a practical foreign language) in the higher education system with connotative teaching materials is of particular importance in teaching students additional words that simultaneously mean two different meanings and in rapidly increasing their vocabulary.

Connotative - explains the additional meaning of words that goes beyond the dictionary definition. The definition of connotative meaning is also known as associated meaning, implied meaning, or secondary meaning. An associated meaning is a meaning that is attached to a word due to its use, but is not part of the word's primary meaning. Also, the concept of biological species examples and limitations, a negative emotion, e.g. if someone feels the color dark blue, they will feel depressed or sad. A positive emotion, e.g. light blue can evoke feelings of calm or peace. Therefore, it is not always easy to interpret the meaning of a word based only on the direct meaning of the word. For example, when we use the word "dinner", there are a number of possible meanings. In addition to the dictionary definition ("meal"), there are also related meanings that we claim as connotative meanings: For one person, dinner is a time of joy, togetherness, conversation or discussion, and laughter. For another person, dinner evokes feelings of loneliness, conflict, or silence. For a third, it evokes the aroma of the kitchen and memories of certain childhood meals. The word "dinner" has a number of meanings based on personal experience. Teaching words with connotative meanings in practical English courses allows students to increase their vocabulary from level B1 to level B2 in one semester. There are three types of connotative meanings: positive, negative, and neutral. The classification is based on the response the word evokes. Positive meanings carry favorable associations. Negative meanings carry unfavorable associations. Neutral means that there are neither favorable nor unfavorable associations.

Denotative and connotative meaning in writing: Now that we know the difference between these two terms, let's use our knowledge to write. Let's say we're writing a scene about a man who has just arrived in Hollywood. What do you think of when you hear the word "Hollywood"? Hollywood has a denotative meaning because it's a literal place in Los Angeles. Hollywood also has a connotative meaning because we associate the word Hollywood with the film industry. The man could have returned to Hollywood, his home. Or he could be an aspiring actor hoping to "make it big" in Hollywood. The connotative meaning of Hollywood is related to the film industry. The connotative meaning of a word can be different for different people, and we need to pay attention to the implied or additional meanings in literature and everyday language. The connotative meaning is the primary meaning. The definition of connotative meaning is that it explains the "additional", related, implied or secondary meaning of a word. Examples of words with connotative meaning include words such as 'rich', 'child', 'dinner'. Types of connotative meaning also include positive words. Here are examples of different types of connotative words:

Ijobiy ma'no	Neytral ma'no	Inkor ma'nosi
noyob	turli	o'ziga xos
qiziquvchan	qiziqli	nosy
g'ayrioddiy	g'ayrioddiy	g'alati
aniqlangan	irodali	qaysar
ishlash	foydalanish	foydalanish

Connotative meanings are not simply categorized according to the positive, negative/neutral value of a word or phrase. Instead, there are specific forms of connotative meaning that we need to look at to understand the many emotional and cultural associations involved in connotative meaning.
